

Ehrenbrietstien is the fort on the top of the high bluff.

Dad on the Parade Grounds inside the fort.

The wooden floorboards, in the foreground, are part of the drawbridge at the entrance to the fort. In the right distance is the bridge, over the Rhine, we crossed to reach the west bank of the river

We had a good vantage point, from the Fort, to see in three directions. As you may imagine he had a story to tell about each of these points of interest.

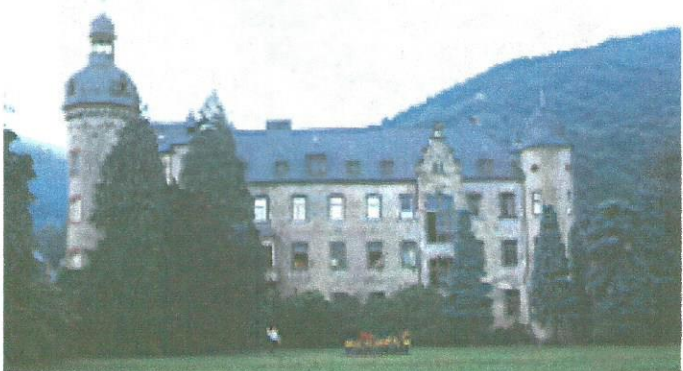

Dad is among that group of people down by the riverside. I imagine he was telling them what things were like in 1919.

The Mosel River joins the Rhine at the tip of land on the far right, above. Dad remembered a statue of Kaiser Wilhelm on horseback on the flat area to the left of where the rivers meet.

In talking with one of the people down on the point Dad learned that the Kaiser Wilhelm Statue had been destroyed on orders from Hitler in 1939 or 40.

Having crossed the river we were now

Schloss Namedy as it appeared on the 21st of August, 1971.